I fear some great and sad change is coming to the Red Men of the forests, for last night after the chase, I laid me down to sleep and visions strange came to me on my couch and did alarm me sore. I must the good medicine man summon, to learn what it all doth portend. (Calls servant; enter a little Indian who drops upon his knees and strikes his forehead on the stage twice.) Chief. - Go on the wings of mighty speed and summon to my tent the mighty Saga - Medicine Man of the Ojibbeways; haste and bid him bring his book of wild and ancient lore and prophecy. Servant. - I go, Chief. (Exit.) Chief. - For a thousand years or more my tribe has wandered these forests, for, years their canoes have traversed these streams; for years they have hunted, trapped and fished, for years they have come and gone as they would and none have said them nay. The mountain air has been breathed but by them, the flowers bloomed on the Prairies but for them, the wild beasts were made for their sport and pleasure, and now my heart is sorrowful within me for I feel that we are on the eve of a great change. Something here (hand on breast,) tells me of a change. In the breeze it is whispered, I hear it in the bird s...
