Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Claims as a Cause of the Mexican War: A Thesis Submitted to New York, University in Partial Fulfillment, of the Requirements for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy After Mexico won her independence from Spain in 1821, there followed a period of thirty or forty years in which both the society and government of that country underwent profound changes. The conservatives completely dominated by the clergy were bent upon retaining the old monarchy. The liberals were equally strong in their desire to establish republican institutions. The struggle between the old order and the new kept Mexico in almost constant revolution from 1821 to 1855. In this period, the form of government was changed eight times and the country was ruled by thirty-five different administrations. Romero, one of the recent ministers of Mexico to this country, says that conditions during this time were very similar to those existing in European countries during the feudal regime. The clergy, he maintains, were really feudal barons monopolizing the wealth and education of the country and exerting a powerful influence over the minds of the people. Webster in 1846 gave it as his opinion that Mexico had had one of the most irregular and worst governments that had ever existed on earth. Such conditions inevitably led to many difficulties between Mexico and the foreign nations whose citizens resided in that country or had business interests there. Many Americans were engaged in Mexican trade, and they soon made numerous complaints because of confiscation of property and personal mistreatment. For twenty years prior to the Mexican War these complaints constituted one of the most important subjects of controversy between the two nations....
