Horatio Seymour appeared upon the stand, and was received with loud and long continued applause. He said: It has been truly said by the President of this Convention that, we do not meet for partisan purposes, although we are assembled in pursuance of a call issued by a political organization. There was no other mode by which we could act as a representative body. The people of the State are divided into two groat parties, one of which gave at the late Presidential contest more than three hundred and fifty thousand, and the other more than three hundred and ten thousand votes for their respective candidates. We have waited with patient expectation for some effort on the part of the responsible majority to avert the calamities which overhang our country. We have hailed with joy every indication of a desire on their part to meet the duties of their position. We have given a cordial approval to every patriotic expression coming from individuals of that party, whether uttered through his Journal by the able Republican leader of the State, by the distinguished Senator at Washington, or by a patriotic and intelligent: Member of our Legislature. The hopes excited by those expressions have died away. Our country is on the verge of ruin, and now, in behalf of the great organization we represent and of those who, since the late election, have joined our ranks, we meet to confront the dangers which menace us. I believe in our resolutions we shall utter the sentiments of a vast...
