The boy went stumbling back, down the dusty path, to his unfinished work in the shop, --the engines for a toy elevated road he was making. But the painfully fashioned fragments of his plan had no meaning for eyes that still saw only the hills against the morning sky, and the three happy ones riding away. This first trip led to a second and longer one, to the fishing-grounds up the river, by the trail on the opposite shore. Jack heard his father and Mr. Dane talking one morning at the breakfast table about riding down to Turners and getting a pack-animal and some more riding animals--and Mamma was going again! What good times the grown-ups did have! And John Wilson, Jack's particular crony from the mens camp, was going, to cook and take care of the animals. This word, animal, is used in...
